Example 1

I completed my PPR for the most recent April – September reporting period and submitted it on October 5th. My Program Specialist reviewed my report, and on October 25th, I received an email notifying me that it was approved. Between October 5th and December 30th, my project is expected to create an additional 3 jobs and leverage an additional $5,000. I want to receive credit for these additions, once they occur, in my final report.

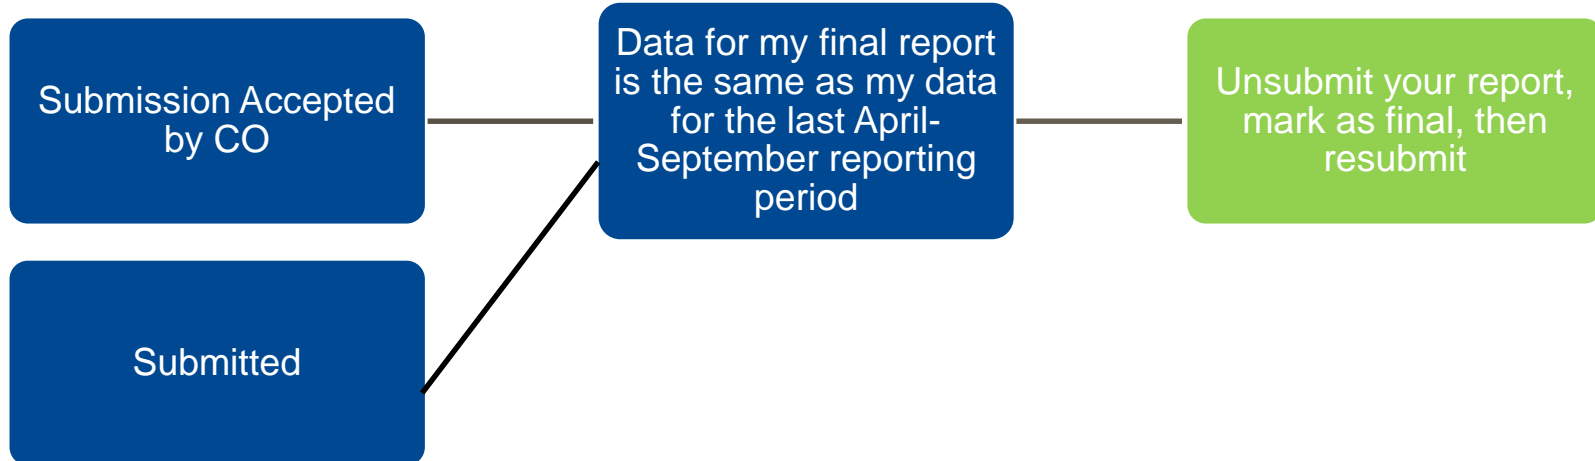

Example 2

I completed my PPR for the most recent April – September reporting period and submitted it on October 26th, however I have not yet received notice that my report has been approved by my Program Specialist. Since submitting my report, I have found out that my project has created an additional 3 jobs and leverage an additional $5,000. I want to receive credit for these additions in my final report.

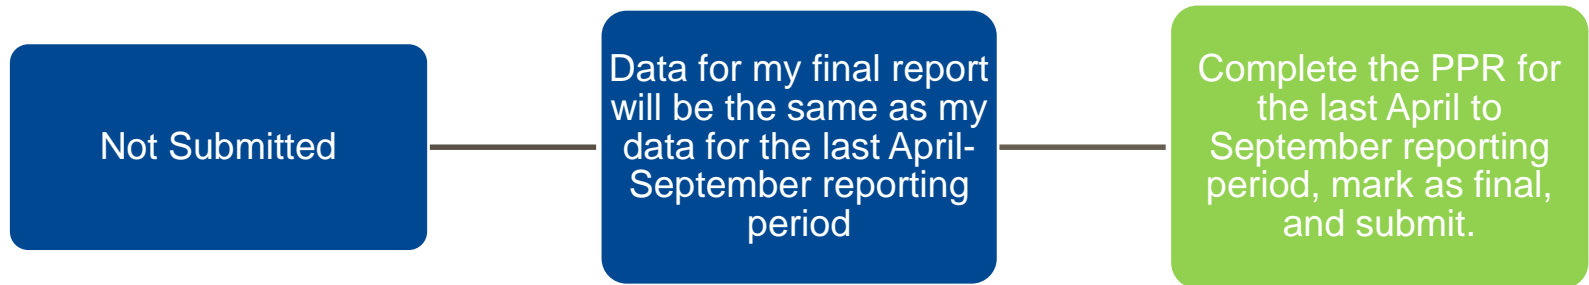

Example 3

I completed my PPR for the most recent April – September reporting period and submitted it on October 5th. I did not mark it as final when I submitted it. However, I am confident that the data contained within this PPR is the most complete and final data for my project.

Example 4

I have not yet submitted my PPR for the most recent April – September reporting period. I am gathering my data now, and I know that it is final (i.e., there will be no additions before December 30th).

Example 5

I have not yet submitted my PPR for the most recent April – September reporting period, because I am still gathering my data. In addition, I am expecting to receive confirmation on November 29th that my project has created an additional 3 jobs and leveraged an additional $5,000. I want to receive credit for these accomplishments in my final report.
